

METHODOLOGY

Sachs Media surveyed 800 Duval County, Florida residents, September 18-20, 2025, via a random sample of the Florida Voter File. Results are representative by age, race, gender, and political affiliation. Aggregate margin of error +/-3.5% at the 95% confidence level.

KEY FINDINGS

- Nearly all Duval County residents (96%) say they know that drivers approaching from both directions must stop when a school bus has its stop arm extended and red lights flashing – but many also see regular violations by drivers.
- Despite widespread knowledge of this law, 89% say that they've witnessed drivers failing to stop, as required, when a school bus has its stop signs extended and flashing lights on. And, only 11% say that in their experience, drivers in their community "always" obey it.
- In the past year alone, 76% have personally seen drivers ignore or illegally pass a stopped school bus at least one time in Duval County.
- 8 in 10 residents (81%) say they're either very (41%) or somewhat (39%) concerned about the safety of children when getting on or off school buses in their community.
- Based on this experience, just 3 in 10 (30%) believe that the public is "well informed" enough about when drivers must stop for school buses. The remaining 70% believe that more education is needed.
